

Teaching Loads of Full Time Faculty

The table below shows the teaching load of all full time faculty in the College of Education across four semesters. This includes faculty not directly involved in areas of concern to NCATE and excludes faculty based outside the College of Education. The maximum teaching load is five sections. This load is only for faculty either (A) teaching multiple sections of 2 credit physical education activity courses or (B) instructors whose only responsibility is teaching. There are a very few full time faculty members teaching no classes during for a particular semester because they are either (A) assigned full time professional development leave that semester or (B) assigned 100% to research and teaching that semester but do teach other semesters. Note that each semester approximately 45% of the full time faculty are teaching two courses and another 20% are teaching only one course.

Teaching Loads of Part Time Adjunct Faculty

The table below shows the teaching load of all part time adjunct faculty and teaching graduate assistants in the College of Education across four semesters. This included faculty not directly involved in areas of concert to NCATE and excludes faculty based outside the College of Education. Approximately two thirds of the part time faculty teach a single course each semester. A part time adjunct faculty member is allowed to teach more than 6 hours or more than two courses only by special approval of the Provost. The one instance of someone teaching 4 sections and nearly all of those teaching 3 sections are teaching 2 credit physical education activity courses. There is one outstanding part time instructor who co-teaches three instructional methods courses each semester for the Department of Instruction and Curriculum Development. To summarize across all College of Education programs, the teaching of all part time adjunct faculty and graduate assistants equates to approximately the equivalent of 40 full time teaching only instructors or about one third of the number of full time faculty
